 On November 26, 1910, Billy Griffith, also called "Colorow" after being convicted by a jury of assault on an elderly man, by the name of John Pino, in a saloon owned by Griffith and swearing revenge against those that testified against him, at trial, retrieved a gun from his home and confronted local resident Frank Sample on New Castle's Main Street. Town Marshall, John Rennix, intervened and was shot by Griffith, Rennix would die a day later from his wounds. Griffith then ran across the street to the 2nd floor of the Trimble Building. From the 2nd floor Griffith shot William Davis who was carrying a rifle that he was returning to the person he had borrowed it from. Griffith also shot Davis's father-in-law, Phillip Carpenter who was walking along side Davis. Davis died from the shot while Carpenter would recover from his wounds. A group of men was gathered and began firing their rifles into the room where Griffith was hiding. It was reported that more than 200 shots were fired into the room.
